

Bachelor thesis „Work adaptation of graduates in the field General Nurse“ deals with the entry of graduates into employment. The adaptation process at the workplace is a very important period in life of every graduate. This process helps us to transition smoothly into our professions. The work place is a check of our theoretical and practical knowledge and it helps us to attain a new wealth of knowledge.

During this adaptation process, nurses should acclimatise themselves to new working conditions. Also it is important that they should be able to work along with their new colleagues. A good adaptation process at the work place is a prerequisite for professional growth in other areas too.

The aim of my bachelor thesis is to find and describe factors affecting the adaptation of nursing graduates at the workplace. I would like to research the motivation level of the graduates, contentment level at work and the satisfaction level with their supervisors. I plan to accomplish this with the aid of questionnaires. Finally, I would like to perform primary data analysis and compare my results with similar research .